

AAC Flash Mob!
AAC Awareness Event at Mohawk College, Hamilton, Canada

A "flash mob" took place on March 19th at Mohawk College's annual Accessibility Day in Hamilton, Canada.

Mohawk students helped to organize the event, an idea developed by Shelley Deegan, former ISAAC Council Chair, and Vic Valentic, ISAAC's current Leadership Chair for People who use AAC, both of whom live in Hamilton.

Vivian Butch, a person who uses AAC, wrote the song, titled "I've Got a Lot to Say." The song was professionally recorded (ISAAC International helped with the production costs). For the flash mob, the song was programmed on a number of AAC devices used by clients of the Technology Access Clinic at Hamilton Health Sciences.

Following the flash mob, Mohawk College students had the opportunity to interact with people who use AAC.
